MISCELLANEOUS READING.

JEFFERSON AND MOORE. SWAN & CO. CONTINUE TO DRAW AS volume of his "Life of Thomas Jefferson." relates in a quiet vein of subdued bumor an amusing episode in the life of that great by the publication of Little's Poems. He was presented to President Jefferson by Mr. Merry, the British Minister. It seems that Jefferson, not aware of the identity of the poetical young gentleman-probably not having heard of, and certainly not having read, his amorous lucubrations-simply spoke to the liliputian stranger, looking down coldly on him, as six feet two will look down on five feet three, and passed on. This was in June 1804, and Moore, much offended, "fell to lampooning the President and everything American, except a few attentive Federal gentlemen and ladies." These he published on his return to England, and that what he wrote in verse was his full conviction, is evident from his private letters to his mother, from America, which Lord John Russell, with his usual want of judgment, has putlished with Moore's Diaries. When some of Jefferson's intimate friends saw the verses in which Moore had not only abused America, but lampooned her Chief Magistrate, they determined to place the subject before the person chiefly concerned. 4 Prizes of 300 apig to 30,000 are 1,200 Jefferson's daughter (Mrs. Randolph) and 4 Prizes of 200 ap'g to 10,000 are 800 his ex-secretary, Mr. Burwell, talked them-500 selves into a towering indignation, and wait-400 ed upon Jefferson, who was sitting reading 300 in the library at Monticello, serenely uncon-200 scious of the calamity. "Burwell pointed 100,000 out the obnoxious passages. The victim interlocutor and then at the other. It was ted; but the calm, gentle Martha's passiongust was irresistible. Mr. Jefferson broke into a clear, hearty laugh. There was more than argument-there was conviction in that laugh. The indignant pair retreated, looking a little crest-fallen, but as soon as the library door closed, joined heartily in the merriment. Many years later, Moore's Irish Melodies appeared in the United States. The book was placed in Jefferson's hands by his granddaughter, who had some curiosity to know how it would be received. "Why," said be, "this is the little man who satirized me so!" He had always sympathised keenly with the Purchasers will please write their signa- Irish patriots. The delightful rythm fell like music on a susceptible ear. He presently exclaimed, "Why, he is a poet after all?"-Henceforth, adds Mr. Randall, the Bard of Erin shared with Burns the honor of being familiarly read by the retired statesman, when Byron, Wordsworth, Southey, Coleridge, Campbell, etc., never could (or at least pever did) break through the barrier of his early habits and tastes. The last page which Mr. Jefferson's dying hand traced, his farewell to his daughter, contained a quotation of several lines from Moore's song commencing, "It is not the tear at this moment shed "- Exchange
